

AAAR ABSTRACT

Aerosol Products from Satellites Observations – Past, Present, and Future

R. Kahn

NASA has recently launched several new satellite instruments aimed at improving our aerosol monitoring capabilities globally. We are in the process of assessing the actual performance of these instruments and retrieval algorithms, and are beginning to distribute preliminary products. This workshop will review some history, summarize current status, and briefly speculate on the future of aerosol observations from space.